The apartment house was built in the typical suburban area of Basel. In order to make the gap architecture open, the building was divided into slices vertically.

In the interior, light-flooded spaces are created by the low window sills. At the same time, the desired privacy is achieved for the living space. The living room, however, has ceiling-high window fronts. They are fitted with sliding windows. Balustrades, as shown, form a fine and elegant division from the outside world as well as a conscious protection from view.
