The images deal with the issue of variability through temporal changes. In the same way that nature and landscape paintings are refashioned through the cycle of the seasons, so new constellations evoke again new situations in our lives. Nothing remains eternally existent, but is always changing within the given context.

There is no absolute description of items or conditions. If there is, then it is only tangible for our understanding as a vague definition. Reality forms a whole picture from different facts. Even this is constantly changing, so everything is relative. Viewed in that light, there is no absolute pure truth. Over the course of time and in each respective subject even the idea of truth is reshaped and changed.

The works of „Season“ show, therefore, only a snapshot or a perspective of the incessant, wonderful changing of time.
